JAMES WILLIAMS, the man charged with seiling oysters to his customers in a small measure, yesterday forfetted collateral in the Pelice Gourt and wont down the river. Williams is suspected to have been at this practice for some time, but the complaint that many others are engaged in the same methods of swindling customers is without foundation. The measures used by the cysterman in gournal are of the regular dovernment gauge, but sometimes when the precious bivalves are searce and dear, the custom of heaping them above the surface of the measures is not followed. Even the majority of buyers on the whatves are entirely satisfied with the measures given them.

Our Curious Traveler Attends a Lec-ture and Discourses About a Hospital. Unicano, Dec. 12, 1882.

To the Editor of The Ecening Critic:
I have just come from the estebrated Cook County Hospital and the various colleges that cluster about it. Here the allopathic lious and homeopathic lambs lay down together in peace and harmony, the students of both echocis attending the lectures of each, with a community of feeling unusual in rival civims and s.

schools attending the lectures of each, with a community of feeling unusual is rival claimants.

The hospital is the control of a system which is now being generally adopted, but which is now being generally adopted, but which chicago has the honor of ortiguating—the Accident Patrol System. All over the city are boxes similar to those used for fire-darms; these are electrically connected with Police Headquarters, and whenever an accident occurs it is signalled to the station, and one of the dozen wagons belonging to the association is gent at once to the scane of the diseaser. A policeman and two "littors" accompany it, and the mangled or mained person is carried off and put in charge of the best skill in the city. The rolling-mills, planing-mills, crowded streats, rallivad contres, grain elevators, &c., keep the wards full of patients, who are a delight to the student in search of information.

The building covers an area as large as the Patent Office, and is built in the Norman sayle of architecture; the corners are flanked by towers of a shape and solidity that William the Conquert himself might have approved of; the wards are roomy, exquisitely mat, well ventilated and full of sunshine. The amphilheatre, where the Clinics are Held, is unusually large and furnished with all the appliances that modern science can afford.

The altopathists have one day and the Homeopathists another, and there is a third clinic that is a joint benefit. There are a fibrary and chapel connected with it, and of from the main building is a neat square house, with whidows and doors noticeably high from the ground. This is the morgue, but as there were several cadevers in it we looked only at its outer walls. The methods of preserving the inmates are by the common refrigerating process and the ether spray, and I really would not dare say how long they will remain intact, for fear my readers might think I was giving an eternity of morgue to the poor dead.

As we drove past I saw something skimming along behind the fence that I thought was a locomotive, and as our horses had shown a preference all the way over for walking on their hind legs, and trying (apparently) to serratch their backs with their care, I wasthed the black object with much interest. We turned a sudden cornex, and it developed into one of the awful hearses peculiar to Chicago. There were six plumes on it, each four teel long and act across as but the pollars of devental
act across as but the pollars of devental and the agent that I was wheeled out of sight before I noticed them.

The heaplist and morgue are built of pressed brick, with trimmings of Jolies stone. This last, by the way, is a furorite building material here, and the effect of its soft gray and cream tints, with here and there a broad dash of chrome yellow, is odd and pleasing.

Away from tais inclosure rolls the prairie in a wide, alightly undulating aweep, and the

and a crisp freshness we do not know in our city.

Facing it on one side is the Bush College, the allopathic school. It is of pressed brick, with stained glass windows and golinic spires. A half-square osyond is the new "Physicians College," where great privileges are accorded the tomeopathic students. It is a charming structure, and looks as if built of snow-climicago snow, I mean, for it is alightly tinged with gray and is a soft ash color. Above the entrance way coils in has relief.

The Serpent Sacred to Esculapius, and through the lancet windows glean white

The Serpent Sacred to Esculapius, and through the lancet windows gleam white walls, oak stair-cases hoavily carved, and wide, handsomely proportioned rooms.

Facing the south front is the Homeopathic College, where we spent the greater part of our hour. Surgery is one of the special features of the course, also the diseases of child-tem. For this last, claids are held weekly at the Foundling's Home, and at the "Nursery" at oreche), and the "liaif Orphan Asylum," all of which are under the charge of this school of medicine.

We were politicly invited to go into the clinic-room, where a lecture was being given on the brain. Well, we went,

Curiosity Setting the Better of Prend, and O, dear Curric, all I could think of was the last half of "Jacques" favorite epecen:

The locturer, however, was so full of his subject that I listened in spite of myselt, and found that Dr. Frait could wreathe with the flowers of faith and poesy even such a grisly thing as askuil and its very ugly contents. He is imbused with a profound respect for the human frame, and he leaches his students a great deal more than the mere machanital part of antomy. Among the two lundred present were a number of ladies, and I noticed that their answers compared very favorably with those given by the many seems of the lecturer's deak was apparently covered with -tripe, and it was

"Dust and ashee." I thought, and left as rapidly as possible, with a little knowledge, and a protound regret that my backbone is nothing better than a swordish. We went from this room into the amplitheatre, where the greatest neatness and ingenuity prevail. The wadded nable on which the subjects are laid is made to fold into a desk, so little cumbersome as to make it a surprise when it "does its tail unfold." The electrical apparatus is one of the most complete in Chicago, and above the doorway hangs a picture said by medical connoisscurs to be a remarkable work of art.

It is a man who has carried into execution

It is the work of one of the students, and is used frequently to Illustrate the lectures. As we quitted the college we met Dr. Woodward, a relative of our Dr. Woodward. He is a young man, but his face is lined with strange creases and wrinkles, which I thought not remarkable when told he devotes himself to experimenting in poisons. He takes them, notes the effects, and applies the remedies; then as soon as he recovers from the effects, he writes a treatise on the subject, and lectures to his classes from actual experience. He is an object of ave, an admiration to the students, and justly so, for at every experiment he takes his life in his hands. He is of middle height, with large gray eyes, fair hair and leard, a strange pallid complexion, and a voice that, while it is pleasant, sounds far away and still.

But it is now 10 o'clock, and I have to catch the 11 o'clock rain for facek Island, whence you shall have a long letter from your Currous Trayvern.
